FORGER MOSBY LOSES HIS CLOTH-ING TO CELLMATES.

ATTIRED ONLY IN A BLANKET.

SUGGESTED SHERIFF GET HIM A BARREL TO WEAR TO COURT.

In Borrowed Raiment He Pleads Guilty and Is Sentenced to Serve One Year in the Penitentiary-Later He Wins n Hnt.

When Sheriff Longfellow entered the jail yesterday morning for the purpose of es-corting J. G. Hunter, alias H. G. Mosby. the forger, to the common pleas court in order to allow him to plead guilty, he was informed of a startling state of affairs During the night Mosby became involved in a game of craps with some of the other prisoners, and had lost every stitch of his clothing with the exception of a shirt. He was wrapped in a blanket when the sheriff told him to get up and accompany him to the courtroom.

"I don't see how I am going to do it sheriff, unless you can provide me with a barrel," answered Mosby, grinningly, as he arcse from his cot "Put on your clothes, and be in a hurry about it " commanded Mr. Longfellow. "I know, but"—

"Come along now, Mosby, and don't act foclish," remarked the sheriff.

"As I was going to tell you, sheriff, I haven't got any more clothes than a blue-jay. You see, I got to shooting craps with the boys last night, and blamed if they didn't skin me out of all of my duds. They didn't play fair; I beat them, but they tool my clothes anyhow," answered the good-

Sheriff Longfellow was very much dis Sheriff Longfellow was very much displeased over the situation, and promised to make the prisoners return the clothing if Mosby would tell him who the prisoners were who had beaten him out of his wearing apparet. Mosby refused to divulge the names of the prisoners, but after a little so liciting among the other prisoners, sufficient attire was borrowed to enable Mosby to go on the street. He went with the sheriff to the courtroom, where he pleaded guilty to forsery. He was sentenced to one year in the penitentiary.

Upon his return to the jail he returned the borrowed clothing and when a reporter called in the afternoon he was attired in the garb of an Indian. Mosby was feel; the borrowed clothing and when a reporter called in the afternoon he was attired in the garb of an Indian. Mosby was feeling jubilant, even though he had lost all of his clothing. After returning from the court house he played a game of cards with one of the prisoners, staking his shirt against a hat. He won the hat which left him with a hat and a shirt. He was asked how he expected to make the trip to the penitentiary without clothing, and said the sheriff would have to supply him with clothes or crate him and send him by express. He said he did not particularly care whether he ever got there. He offered to stake his shirt and hat against a dime. A reporter accepted the proposition and the game started. Mosby lost. He turned over his hat and was about to remove his shirt when told that he might retain it.

Jailer Fay stated that visitors smuggled the dice to the prisoners and that they generally succeeded in keeping them from him until the regular weekly search of the jail is made. Mosby may get his clothes back, but if so, it will be by order of the paller or sheriff, as he declares he would never ask for their return.

GIBBS BECOMES INDIGNANT. Telegraphs Attorney General Boyle to Come and Prosecute Metropolitan Officers.

J. B. Gibbs will probably fall to send any of the Metropolitan officials to jail or force them to pay a fine for violating the law which provides that all electric street cars shall be vestibuled during the months of November. December, January, February and March. Before Constable Hardie secured service on Superintendent Walter Gillham yesterday that official called on County Attorney Miller and explained to him that his company was living up to the law just as closely as it could. He said it had taken a great deal of work to vestibule all of the company's cars but that the last open car on the Argentine line had been remodeled and that he would take the two cars complained of by Gibbs on the West side line out of service until the vestibule could be added.

County Attorney Miller was convinced that the company was endeavoring to comply with the law and informed Judge Pfost of the North side city court that he would not prosecute the case if the arrest was made. Gibbs, the complaining witness, became highly indignant. He wired Attorney General Boyle last night asking this official if he would not take the cases up and prosecute them.

Gibbs proposed to cause more warrants to be issued yesterday, but the county attorney's stand prevented it. The old car being used for "owl" train service was taken off Sunday night and there is some talk of abandoning this train. Should the company decide to do this the patrons of the "owl" will be greatly inconvenienced. politan Officers.

REICHNECKER DIVORCE CASE.

Their Reconcillation of Brief Effect and Both Are in Court Agnin.

Again.

The troubles of Mr. and Mrs. Newton Reichnecker are not at an end Mr. Reichnecker are not at an end Mr. Reichnecker brought suit for divorce some time ago, but both he and his wife recently became regular attendants at Major Cole's revival meetings and at the services one night a reconciliation was brought about. They have again separated, however, and Mr. Reichnecker declares he will prosecute his suit for divorce. Mrs. Reichnecker will fight it. Yesterday they appeared in court to settle the question of temporary alimony. Mrs. Reichnecker asked for $59 atterney fees and $29 per month for her support. She was placed on the stand and denied practically all of the allegations made in her husband's reply. Judge Alden allowed her $15 ailmony and gave Mr. Reichnecker time in which to file affidavits in rebuttal of Mrs. Reichnecker's testimony.

One of the men kept guard over Mr. and Mrs. Knobek while the other two looked for valuables. It is thought that they expected to find some money hidden about the house, as they made a very careful search. They left without securing any money. The police are at work on the case.

CITY BUYS FIRE APPARATUS. Contracts for Two Hose Wagons and 4,000 Feet of Hose Awarded Yesterday.

Aldermen Buchhalter, Peterson and Men

Aldermen Buchhalter, Peterson and Mendethall, comprising the fire committee of the city council, with Mayor Marshman and Fire Chief Norman, met in the mayor's office at the city hall yesterday afternoon and awarded contracts for two new fire apparatuses and the necessary hose for the two new fire stations. A number of representatives of Eastern concerns were presentatives of Eastern concerns were present and the fire fighting material was secured at extraordinarily low prices.

The Fire Extinguishing Company, of Chicago, was awarded the contract for the two new hose wagons. They are to be of the latest pattern combination hose and chemical wagons with steel beds, which are now being used in all the large cities. Each wagon will carry 2,000 feet of hose and fifty gallons of chemicals. According to the contract the new wagons are to be delivered within sixty days.

The contract for 4,000 feet of hose was let to the Eureka Fire Hose Company, of Chicago and New York. The hose material purchased is the regular 5-cent hose, but the city was given a price of 65 cents. The cost of the wagons is $1,500 each. The regular price is $1,800. Of ten bids these were the lowest and the contracts were let by a unanimous vote of the committee.

The property owners of this city generally approve the action taken by the council in pushing this matter. The present fire department is inadequate to handle a good sized conflugration providing the entire department should turn out, and when the three companies are at work on a blaze all the remainder of the city is left unprotected. The recent destructive fires have aroused the people and there are few who do not ratify the action of the council. On account of the poor fire protection the rate of insurance is very high and the poorer property owners are unable to carry insurance sufficient to cover their risks. The loss on property caused from fire during the present year would more than pay for the additional fire lighting apparatuses. It is thought that the two new stations will be in Deltz Will Ask for a Continuance. Attorney Ben S. Henderson yesterday argued a motion before Judge Alden, of the district court, to take depositions in Germany in behalf of William Deltz, who is to be given a new trial for the killing of Russell Lindsay. The object of Mr. Henderson was to show to the court that the defendant has a splendid reputation in his ratios country.

the defendant has a splendid reputation in his native country.

Judge Alden overruled the motion. Deltz' second trial is docketed for this morning, but his attorneys will make an effort for a continuance. Attorney Henderson said last night that the refusal of the court to allow them to take depositions in the old country had disarranged their plans and that a continuance at the present time was of vital importance to his client. He will file a number of affidavits in support of his plea for a postponement of the trial.

INDEPENDENCE.

Air Line Officials Granted Permission to Relay Tracks on Delaware Street.

Mayor Millard received a letter yesterday from E. L. Martin, vice president of the Kansas City & Independence Air line, asking permission to relay the tracks of the company on Delaware street for the express purpose of taking out of the Air line yards in this city the cars detained there. Mr. Martin said that the demurrage on these cars had already amounted to a considerable sum, and if the city would permit the tracks to be relaid the cars would be returned to their respective owners. Mr. Martin further states that it is not the desire of the Air line company to antagonize the people of Independence or to retaliate for the unlawful act of some of its citizens in removing the track at Delaware street. for the unlawful act of some of its citizens in removing the track at Delaware street.

Mayor Millard, after consulting with City Connector Paxton, wrote a letter assuring Mr. Martin that the city would not object to the company replacing the tracks for the purpose of removing cars. Mr. Martin does not state in his letter that the Air line company will take up the tracks again. company will take up the tracks again. Many citizens think that the Air line will proceed to run freight trains as usual un-less stopped by injunction. Should the Air less stopped by injunction. Should the Air line run the freight trains, it will make very little difference, as far as the city is concerned, as the city counselor has been ordered to take steps to make the road comply with its franchise, and this will be done unless the council revokes the instructions to the counselor.

From the tone of Mr. Martin's letter, it is thought the much talked of suit against the city for detaining cars will not be brought by the company. The track will likely be laid to-day, but members of the council are still of the belief that freight trains should not be allowed to run unless the passenger service is resumed.

Leavenworth Chickens for Mexico.

Leavenworth Chickens for Mexico.

For many years Leavenworth has been noted as the headquarters of game chickens, and has been the scene of a number of memorable mains. The fame of the city's chickens is not confined to nearby points, but has extended to distant regions.

A few days ago Fred Braeg, one of Leavenworth's chicken fanciers, received an order from the City of Mexico for an invoice of fighting chickens. In response to that order this morning he makes a shipment of fifteen cocks and five hens. This is the first shipment made to Mexican territory, but will not be the last, as Mr. Braeg has orders for lifty more fighting chickens. This looks as though the Mexican taste for built fighting was changing for sport with the feathered biped.

During the administration of the former police board an edict was issued against the slot machines. For a while they were scarce, but before the board terminated they began to make their appearance again. When the new board took hold stringent orders were issued against gambling, policy, including the slot machines, and at once everything disappeared. But now it seems that a change of policy has taken place, for the machine is more in evitaken place, for the machine is more in evitaken place, for the machine is more in evi-dence than it has ever been in the city. It is to be found in nearly every saloen, in many of the cigar stores and in the ho-tels. Several different varieties of the ma-chines are to be found.

She asked about the trains to Marshall and said she guessed she would go there, but after a moment's hesitation said she would wait until to-day and go to Sweet Springs.

She wore a brown, close-fitting jacket that buttoned up tightly about her throat and a brown fedora hat with a single dark feather on the side. She carried a watch and wore several rings, and handsome earrings with stones that showed they were genuine. She was exceedingly pale and looked faint and tired out. While she was inquiring at the ticket window she was exceedingly nervous, and was continually wringing her hands as if in utter despair. She looked about the room nervously while talking, as if in dread of the approach of some one she feared. Her whole appearance and demeanor was that of one bordering on nervous prostration or in great dread of some impending disaster.

After deciding to stay in the city over night she left the depot, carrying a large and heavy valise and a heavy fur coat, and went up to the Ninth street depot, where she boarded an east bound car on the red line. The Pinkerton operative who came from Billings on the same train stood near the door while she was talking to the ticket agent and when she left the depot he left, too, and was her faithful "shadow" up to the cable depot and went cast on the same car that carried her.

Superintendent Shoemaker, of the Pinkerton service, was asked last evening where Miss Neal was staying. He appeared surprised that her presence in the city was known to The Journal.

"How in Sam Hill did you find it out?" he inquired. He was assured The Journal knew she came from Billings and that a Pinkerton operative was on the same train.

"Where is she storning this avening?"

"Where is she stopping this evening?" was asked.
"She is with some friends," he replied.

"No, she is with some friends and has retired by this time and cannot be seen to-night by anyone."

A reporter for The Journal called last evening at the home of Dr. A. B. Earle, at 2837 East Seventh street, where Miss Neal had stopped frequently when in the city, but there was no one at home, or, if so, they declined to respond to the bell when it was rung vigorously.

WHY NO COLORED JURORS? County Court and Demands the of the effort, but the powers that have successfully contrived to keep colored men off the jury lists diewn in the circuit and criminal courts.

R. C. Williams, editor of the Observer, the colored weekly paper, appeared before the county court yesterday and asked that colored men be placed on the jury list. He was informed that there was no reason in law why colored men should not serve and that the names of many colored men were in the jury wheel. It is a singular circumstance, if the statement is true, that no colored jurors have been drawn for years. It would seem that if the names are there, some of them would come out some time. But the spectacle of a colored juror would be one to astonish the oldest member of the county gang that controls the jury system in Jackson county. The laws of the land make no distinction as to color or race. It cost four years of war and 200,000 lives to eliminate the distinction theretofore made, and the colored people propose to see whether the law can be either defied or evaded in the future.

MUSIC AND THE DRAMA.

There is much in "A Southern Romance, B. B. Vallentine's dramatization of Dolly Highee's "In God's Country," to remind one of "Alabama," Augustus Thomas' bea was not with her when she left the train. The languorous atmosphere of the sunny South pervades the entire play, although it is spiced with a bit of Northern spirit and several times stirred by dranatic episode. There is a venerable planter with a doting daughter and there is a frustrated elopement. The Southern ideas of hospitality and family benor are domiant. But after all, the resemblance to the

of hospitality and family benor are dominant. But after all, the resemblance to the Thomas play is more in the local color of characters, manners and environments than in the story or incident, and there is little evidence of deliberate imitation. It would be impossible to draw a picture of the South with any degree of tadelity and not suggest in some part the admirable reflections of "Alabama," which is the representative Southern play up to date.

"A Southern Romance," which was seen at the Coates last night, is an interesting story, presenting the anomaly—in this environment—of a French hero. This hero refusing to form a matrimonial alliance planned by his father, leaves his home and fortune to earn a living "in the land where all labor is honorable;" but he makes the mistake of going into the South instead of the North and when his necessities drive him to take employment as a gardener he is naturally classed as "white trash." But for the fact that his identity and merits are early made known to the audience there would be an oppressive incongruity in the love of the Southern girl for the man who tends her flowers. At least this incongruity is impressed by the other characters of the play, who are not into the secret of the man's birth and title until the story comes to an end. When the clopement is discovered the French Lochhavar is pursued by a posse with shotguns, the leaders of the party being the gray haired father and the girl's affianced lover, an unworthy duffer who violates the theory that blood will tell, for he is accepted on the merits of his father.

The company presenting this play is one of general merit without distinctive strength. There is, however, one decidedly clever characterization—that of the

This Andre appears on the scene with little command of English to explain his presence or make known his wants, and finds no one who can comprehend his native tongue. But Lydia Ronsome and the audience were recovered that the results of the comprehend his native tongue. and finds no one who can comprehend his native tongue. But Lydia Ronsome and the audience soon understand that he is worn with travel, that he is seeking employment and that he ishungry. Lydia orders the old black servant to bring him something to eat, and he insists that his benefactress shall sit near him while he enjoys his breakfast. This scene is comparatively long, but scarcely a word is spoken. Yet the pantomime is so eloquent, and yet so subdued, that the depths and relations of these two characters are revealed as clearly as language could reveal them, and the processes have the merit of heing novel. The impression made by Mr. Corrigan in this scene was very promising, but it was fulfilled by what followed. His manner is thoroughly natural, but never commonplace. His voice is deep and musical, but it is as courageous as it is gentle. An actor who can so eloquently denote a passive character is one out of the ordinary.

Others in the cast who de-serve mention for superior accomplishments are Edward A. White and Miss Emma Brennan. The play will be repeated to-night and to-morrow afternoon and night.

ARRANGING THE DETAILS.

Work of Adapting the City to Its Nev Limits Will Be Pushed as Fast as Possible.

The next step in the way of adapting th city to its new limits will be the passage of an ordinance providing for the establishan ordinance providing for the establish-ment of the new wards and the election of councilmen and other officers. Until these steps are taken conditions will remain as they are at present. City Counselor Middle-brook says he stands ready to draft the measure as soon as some member requests it.

There is considerable division among the councilmen as to what is desired. Some want two, others three, and still others four new wards created; there is an element favorable to the redistricting of the retire city, the contention being that the present Eighth and Ninth wards particularly are too large. As all the preliminaries have now been complied with, the details are expected to be arranged rapidly. In view of the fact that there is much important work to come before the council in the immediate future, special meetings are likely to be of frequent occurrence. In addition to this work the committee chosen to revise the ordinances of the city will seen be ready to submit its report. This document will be voluminous, and as each section will have to be read and considered by the council, no little time will be consumed. The work is in charge of a joint committee, consisting of Messrs. Brown, who and Eyssell, of the upper house; Messrs. Smith, Burrows and Pendergast, of the lower house, and Attorneys Rozzelle and Thompson, who were employed for the work. Mr. Wyne says that this report will be ready for submission to the council very soon, as only a few more meetings are necessary in which to complete it.

AWOKE IN THE NICK OF TIME. Santa Fe Passenger Roused Himself From a Doze to Find a Negro Going Through His Pockets. A young negro made a bold attempt to rob a passenger on the Santa Fe passenger train which arrived at the Union depot at 19:30 o'clock last night. The negro boarded the train at Argentine, Kas., and took a seat in the chair car beside a well dressed, middle-aged man, who was apparently asleep. Shortly after the train had started the man awoke and found the negro's hand in his inside pocket. He grappled with the young man and called for the conductor to arrest him, but that official was not in the car. The negro pleaded to be released, but the passenger beran beating him with his fist, when he jerked away and escaped from the car before he could be apprehended.

The ordinance granting the East side electric railway a franchise on East Fifth street was passed over the mayor's veto in the upper house by a vote of 7 to 2; Messrs. Graham and Jewell voted to sustain the mayor.

The November appropriation ordinance was taken up, the total approximating $80,-000. Aldermen Brown and Wyne, pending the vote, referred to the charges of extravagance that had been made. They pointed out the fact that fully $3,000 of the sum involved was for the liquidation of claims previously contracted, including the Quindaro works, pipe from Westport, coal, the purchase of machinery, labor at various points, and other things, all of which were necessary and now the property of the city. The ordinance was passed by a transimous yote.

An ordinance was passed requiring the city clerk to prepare duplicate copies of the amendments adopted on December 2, extending the city limits, and ordering that one be sent to the secretary of state for recording, and the other to be filed in the archives of the city.

An ordinance appropriating $2.546.47 was passed to cover the expense of advertising the extension election.

An ordinance was introduced providing for an assistant plumbing inspector, with a salary of $50 per month, and a clerk for the department at $50 per month. A futile effort was made to have the rules suspended and the measure passed. The argument was made that, owing to a great amount of work in the department at this time such help was necessary. Much complaint had resulted over the delay from this source. The measure carried a fee of $1 for all plumbing permits issued where the work was new. Alderman Brown championed insmediate action, and Mr. Morgan wanted it deferred. It inally went to the judiciary committee.

Some interesting details of the working of the sidewalk ring came out in the course of an extended debate in the lower house on the ordinance to confirm the contract with E. M. Walton for repairing sidewalks in district No. 3. J. J. Armstrong was the lowest bidder by $400, including cypress lumber, and grading. No cypress lumber is used and no grading is ever done. But excluding these items. Armstrong was still the lowest bidder by $21. The board of public works let the contract to Mr. Walton, because Armstrong's bid was at ridiculous figures on lumber and grading never called for.

Mr. Burrows declared that the sooner the city got cown to where all contractors could bid on an equal footing the better it would be. Mr. Armstrong, knowing no cypress lumber was used, bid 16 cents pet 1,000 feet, while Walton, not knowing all the ins and outs of the sidewalk ring, bid the reasonable figure of $19.

Mr. Brinkley, Burrows and Craig were the only members voting for Walton.

When the appropriation ordinance came up Councilman Simonds made a vigorous protest against the city paying thousands of dollars for electric lights. He declared that the whole system was a grand humbug and that the only sensible thing was In the Lower House.

The house receded from its amendment to the union labor ordinance by striking out the provision making the ordinance take effect when the present city contracts expire. The measure now goes to the mayor, having passed the upper house.

Will Propose It Again.

Alderman Jewell, of the upper house of the common council, who in May last in-troduced an ordinance having for its ob-ject the abolition of the department store, proposes to revive the measure and have a report on it submitted to the council at an early date. He was in consultation with City Counselor Middlebrook over the matter yesterday, but no conclusion was arrived at.

Colored Voters Want Recognition.

A novel scheme to enliven guests at a dinner table was introduced by a South side matron recently. Each course was pleasantly interrupted by a round of picture guessing. There was, of course, a prize, which came with the coffee, to the guest who had the greatest number of correct names. The little interruption of the meal proved very successful, particularly to the prize winner, who received a beautiful Delft plaque. The pictures were in sets of three, five to a set. The first included noted men-a musician, a reformer, a king, a statesman and a philosopher, living and dead, selected at random from the world's list. The second set was made up of actresses, and the third comprised photographs of five famous paintings. When the guests took their seats at the table it was noticed that the name cards were large, square white ones, with a pencil lying by the side of cach. When the pictures began to be handed around, the company was requested to turn the cards over, and it was found that each was numbered from one to fifteen. In their order the pictures were kept going, and against each number was set a guess as to the identity of the corresponding picture. At the end of the round of each set the identifications were made public by the hostess, those having them right making a cross against the properly numbered name. To Enliven Guests at Dinner.

Started a Balky Horse.

Started a Balky Horse.

It was left to a R-year-old girl to devise a means to start a balky street car horse at Forty-sixth street. New York. The car was leaded with passengers, when, without any provocation, the animal came to a full step and would not budge another inch. A crowd collected and the passengers got out of the car. The driver brought his whip down across the horse's back without effect. A stout man, who had just stepped off the car, said: "Don't do that; I'll get him started." He rubbed the horse's nose, patted him on the neck and talked persuasively, all without result. By this time four cars were stalled. Somebody suggested oats, another kerosene, a third a patrol wagen, Another held a burning newspaper under the horse. Still it didn't move. At last the little girl pushed her way through the crowd and said: "Say, mister, if you'll ring the bell twice the horse will think somebody has just got off and he'll go shead." The conductor pulled the bell and the jassengers had to run to catch the car. And now they are wondering why they didn't think of that scheme before.
